

Assessment – Get involved

NAMES

How can we participate in Australia's democracy?

Starting a campaign is one way.

Some campaigns use methods to directly influence the Parliament, such as lobbying, contributing to parliamentary committees or petitioning members of parliament. Other campaigns use direct action via social media or public meetings to highlight the issue within the community.

In this assessment, your group will create your own campaign to influence change on an issue that is important to you.

1. Think about issues in society that you feel strongly about.
2. Choose one issue to base your campaign on. This could be a local issue, about your school or community environment. Alternatively, you could choose a national or international issue, such as climate change.
3. Identify your message.
4. Discuss which campaigning method/s might be most effective for this issue.
5. Decide which method/s you will use.
6. Design your campaign either to influence Parliament to make a law that supports your message or to change society's attitudes and behaviour. Your campaign could even do all of these things.
7. Present your campaign to the class. Your presentation should go for 5 to 8 minutes and should be planned and rehearsed.

Be creative in your use of persuasive language and presentation.

Make sure your group uses democratic processes to choose your issue, message and campaign method/s.

As a group, write a 400-500 word rationale detailing your campaign issue. Include:

- A brief analysis of your chosen issue and the change you want (your message).
- An explanation of how people can use campaigns to influence change.
- Why you chose to use these particular campaigning method/s.

If you wish, you can launch your campaign.
